Religious Liberty Department

In the United States, the religious freedom challenge most often experienced by Seventh-day Adventists is the religious rights of employees in the secular workspace. Unfortunately, since 1977 the Supreme Court has held that employers have only a de minimis, or minimal, requirement to accommodate the religious practices of their employees. The de minimis standard particularly harms religious minorities like Adventist Christians who wish to honor God by refraining from work on Sabbath.

Through both court cases and legislative initiatives, the Adventist Church continues to work toward restoring an appropriate or “reasonable” standard for employer accommodation. Your Union PARL department is available to assist if you experience religious discrimination in the workplace.

We, the Southampton SDA Church are here to help in Religious Liberty issues.

- FELLOWSHIP ✓
- BIBLE STUDY ✓
- MISSION STORIES ✓
- PRAYER ✓
- UNDERSTANDING SCRIPTURE ✓
- AND MUCH MORE ✓

While it is essential that wise, patient efforts should be made by the teacher, the work must not be left altogether to the Sabbath-school and church worker, but it must find its foundation and support in the work of the home. Parents have a sacred responsibility and charge committed to them, and they are called upon to keep their charge, to bear their responsibility in the fear of God, watching for the souls of their children and they who must give an account. – {TSS 35.2}
